Beer Kits - Prices to suit all pockets

Simply Beer Kits

The Simply range uses the latest advances in technology and packaging. Each pouch is 'cold filled' with liquid malt extract as opposed to the traditional 'hot filled' canning method, by doing so makes for a final fresher tasting beer. By using a pouch, less packaging materials are used, reducing costs by up to 2/3, allowing for more investment in higher quality ingredients.

Chemicals

Bentonite A fining agent used to clear wine, it attracts particles in the wine and falls with them to the bottom as sediment.

Campden Tablets Added to wine after fermentation to preserve the wine.

Citric Acid Occurs naturally in most fruits, easy to use with pleasant fruity flavour. Added to country wines to create flavour in otherwise low acid flat wines.

Fungal Amylase Starch reducing enzymes, turning the non-fermentable starch into fermentable starch. Also contains pectin destroying enzyme.

Lactic Acid A weak acid, good to use in red wines which are excessively acidic. Added to induce a malo-lactic fermentation to reduce acidity.

Malic Acid Malo-lactic fermentation occurs naturally in fresh wines (i.e. Champagne). It is a third fermentation that normally occurs in the bottle and produces a pleasant freshness to white wine and reduces acidity a little.

Oak Chippings Can be added at any time during fermentation, depending on how strong an 'oaky' flavour is required in the wine.

Pectolase Powder Pectin destroying enzyme, used with fresh fruit/vegetables high in pectin. A pectin haze could form and prevent the wine from clearing.

Potassium Sorbate (fermentation stopper) A preservative added to wine at the end of fermentation to prevent re-fermentation.

Precipitated Chalk (Calcium Carbonate) Helps to reduce acidity.

Protafloc Tablets used to prevent protein haze (substitute for Irish Moss)

Sodium Metabisulphite Used as a sterilising agent to clean equipment, also to suppress unwanted bacteria and 'wild' yeasts before a fermentation, and to preserve a wine after fermentation has completed.

Tannin Powder Tannin is naturally found in the skins of grapes. Improves the taste of red wines and gives the impression of dryness in the mouth. Beneficial to wine being stored for a long time.

Tartaric Acid A natural acid found in grapes and is said to improve the character of the wine.

Tronozymol Yeast nutrient and energiser. Ideal for 4 week wine production and preventing stuck fermentation and also aids country wine making.

Wine Sweetener To improve the sweetness of finished wine if it has fermented out too dry. Contains saccharin.
